

How Garden Comm International Members Can Use This Resource

These resources were developed to support your education, outreach and marketing to gardeners and members of the general public. There is no charge for their use, but we do request that NICH and individual authors where appropriate be cited. A great way to cite these resources is to link back to the NICH resource page:

This information was compiled by members of the National Initiative for Consumer Horticulture and SERA-50. Links and resources are posted at: <https://consumerhort.org/editorial-resources-for-consumer-horticulture/>

How This Resource was Developed

These videos and other resources were developed by University communications departments or other science-based communicators specifically for public educational use. Typically in the videos, attribution is denoted. But, we do encourage reference to NICH when possible.

Related web, video and social media resources

Video on hardiness zone map changes from UTIA:

https://www.facebook.com/100028941746279/videos/2774520052711895/?_so_=_permalink